Meet Windows Ink Workspace!

Microsoft recently launched the Windows Anniversary update, including a Windows Ink . This new workspace gives the ability to draw and annotate with a pen in all kinds of useful ways. For example, you can jot down notes in the Sticky Notes app, which on its own is mildly convenient. Windows Ink is built into plenty of other apps too, like Maps (which lets you measure distances between two points by drawing a line) and Microsoft Office (which lets you highlight text with your pen or delete words by striking them out).

And, of course, it's built for artists as well, which can use a pen for digital drawing in plenty of different apps. There's a virtual ruler complete with a compass to help you draw straight lines at the correct angles. Press the pen button in your taskbar and you'll see a list of apps that support ink input so you can quickly start writing or drawing without fumbling through desktop windows.. More Windows 10 apps will gain inking support too.... So easy to use on a CTOUCH display! Read more about Windows Ink Workspace >>
